Prague, February 18, 2014 – The exhibition The World of Tim Burton is opening for the general public on March 28, 2014. The show, held at The Stone Bell in Prague, and featuring artwork from Tim Burton's private archive, will be inaugurated by the internationally renowned filmmaker in person. As part of the event, several hundred lucky visitors will be offered the chance to obtain the artist's autograph at a book signing, on the opening day. Basic tickets to the exhibition can now also be bought by advance booking at www.ticketpro.cz.

Those interested in tickets to this unique cultural event can now plan their visit well ahead. Ticketpro agency has launched advance bookings at the basic price of 190,- CZK per ticket. Admission is always reserved for a specific date, their overall number being limited to 400, the maximum permitted by the venue's capacity. Reduced tickets will be available only at The Stone Bell box office. For detailed information, go to www.timburton.cz, or to the web site of City Gallery Prague (www.ghmp.cz). Regarding admission to Tim Burton's autograph signing session, a limited number of special tickets will be offered by advance booking, and only those having them will be admitted. The exact date will be announced in due time. The ticket to the book signing will also allow for entrance to the exhibition.

All information pertinent to the exhibition will be made available to the general public through social networks as well as at the newly established web site, www.timburton.cz, whose graphic design has been created by Leagas Delaney. The motif of black-and-white stripes with 3D lettering is the main feature of the exhibition's graphic identity, which will be displayed all around Prague.

The architectural design of the show featuring approximately 500 drawings, paintings, photographs, puppets and sculptural installations, is being taken care of by Olgoj Chorchoj, a studio whose working scope reaches beyond the borders of this country's design scene. During its existence of over two decades, it has accumulated a number of awards, including a Grand Prix of the Society of Czech Architects, Interior of the Year Award, and two Czech Grand Design Awards for 2010. Thanks to its involvement, visitors to the show can look forward to an outstanding architectural concept with an unorthodox installation, and above all a coupling of Tim Burton's work with the Czech glass-making tradition.

The exhibition is being organized by Art Movement, in association with City Gallery Prague, under the curatorial direction of Jenny He and in collaboration with Tim Burton Productions.

The organizers

Art Movement is a nongovernmental and non-profit-making organization (civic association) active in inviting artists, curators, lecturers and cultural managers for co-operation on short- and long-term cultural and educational projects and productions in the Czech Republic and beyond. It works with both up-and-coming and established artists, and with experienced lecturers from the Czech Republic and the European Union. It has been focusing its projects on correlations between the fine arts and film-making (as in exhibitions of Czech Surrealists, Stanley Kubrick, and others), between civic and interactive elements (as in the project Civic Minds), and between civic and educational contents (as in Parallel Worlds).
